

ABSTRACT

A photonic crystal is formed on a semiconductor substrate using a semiconductor-based fabrication process by forming a number of 5 alternating layers of material that have different dielectric constants. The layers of material are then etched to form a number of spaced-apart stacks of alternating layers of material. An interstack material is then formed between the stacks.

10